

CULTURAL CONTENT AND GROWTH OF CAPITALISM AND DEVELOPMENT OF CIVILIZATION

Week : 9-10

Culture

Culture is the way of life for a group of people. It includes things like their language, food, music, traditions, and beliefs. Culture helps shape how people think and act, and it can change over time based on different influences like history and new ideas.

Material Culture

Material culture includes all the physical objects and resources that people create and use to express their culture, like homes, tools, and public spaces. These tangible items reflect a community's achievements and values, showcasing their lifestyle and status.

Non-Material Culture

Non-material culture refers to the intangible aspects of culture, such as beliefs, values, norms, and social practices. This includes ideas about religion, ethics, and how people should behave, shaping their thoughts and relationships.

Differences Between Material and Non-Material Culture

- Material Culture: Focuses on physical objects (like cars and buildings) that represent a culture's achievements and capabilities.
- Non-Material Culture: Emphasizes abstract ideas (like values and beliefs) that guide how people behave and relate to one another.

Cultural Lag

Cultural lag is when a society takes time to catch up with new technology or changes. When something new is invented, like a gadget or idea, people might not know how to adjust their beliefs or habits right away. This gap can cause confusion as everyone tries to figure out how to use or understand the new thing.

Civilization

Civilization describes a complex society with settled communities, specialized roles, and advanced technologies. Key features include:

1. Moral and Legal Systems: Rules that maintain order and justice.
2. Advanced Technology: Innovations that improve communication and production.
3. Government: Institutions that protect rights and maintain order.
4. Food Surplus: Agricultural advancements that support larger populations.
5. Culture: Shared practices and beliefs that unify the society.

Growth of Capitalism

Capitalism is a system where people and businesses own things, like land and products. In capitalism, people can sell and buy freely in markets. The main aim is to make money. Prices are set by how much people want things and how many there are. This system encourages new ideas and competition, but it can also create gaps between rich and poor..

Socialism

Socialism is an economic and political system that promotes shared ownership of resources and businesses. It focuses on cooperation rather than competition and is managed by a government that ensures everyone has equal access to resources and services.

Consequences of Socialism

- More Equal Society: Reduces income differences and promotes social justice.
- Reduction of Poverty: Provides support and welfare programs for those in need.
- Regulation of Market Excesses: Prevents monopolies and protects consumers.
- Universal Health Care: Improves public health and productivity.
- Promotion of Common Good: Focuses on the welfare of society rather than individual profit.
- Environmental Protection: Encourages sustainable practices for the benefit of everyone.
